

A positive quarter

The fund posted another quarter of positive returns but lagged the overall global equity market. The year-end rally in the US equity market accompanied by a much stronger US dollar were major headwinds for the fund as our exposure to US assets is markedly lower than any underlying benchmark. Currently no fewer than 83 companies in the S&P500 now trade above 10 times sales which is unprecedented. The valuation spread versus Emerging Markets and Japan has never been greater. For us, as contrarian and price-driven investors, this spells major opportunities for the coming year. A large proportion of our portfolio is exposed to South Korea, Canada and Japan in equities trading at a discount to even these much cheaper averages.

Portfolio drivers

In one area of the ignored and underpriced global equity market, namely Japanese banks, we observed a significant re-rating of our own Aichi Bank, a small regional bank which announced a merger with smaller Chukyo Bank. In addition, the bank has substantially increased its dividend payout. Since the announcement, the equity has re-rated about 30% and contributed significantly to year-end performance. We also initiated new positions in smaller regional banks Shiga Bank and Keiyo Bank. These banks trade at discounted multiples to tangible book values and are forming alliances with other Japanese regional banks boosting future potential profitability. There is substantial room for increased capital allocation to shareholders as the banks' balance sheets are extremely overcapitalised.

We increased our position in the discounted Japanese conglomerate Panasonic. The company reported earnings numbers that were somewhat below our expectations, as we believe they were temporarily negatively impacted by raw material costs, semi-conductor shortages and supply chain issues. However, Panasonic's EV battery unit, which is one of the largest producers of batteries to Tesla, is posting substantial growth and strengthening its market position. We believe this unit is underappreciated by equity markets as well as undiscovered from an environmental perspective.

Another positive contributor in the quarter was Austrian based Raiffeisen Bank. In early 2021 the company was plagued by litigation issues and higher credit provisions. Since then, the litigation issue has cleared, and the bank posted very strong earnings which propelled a re-rating towards our price target. The share price is up more than 80% in less than a year and we exited the position.

Less favourable developments in the quarter include the issues faced by Fortuna Silver regarding a Mexican mine permit, which hit the stock hard in Q4. This issue was resolved in December, and the stock regained most of the drawdown after we had increased our position. We were also surprised by the magnitude of the cost overruns in Argonaut Gold, which put a dent in the otherwise solid performance of the equity.

We continued to increase our position in Cascades, the Canadian packaging and tissue producer, currently the fund's largest position. Following a year of dialogue with management, we recently escalated our level of engagement to convey our thoughts on the company's suboptimal structure. We believe there is a solid case for a separation of the Tissue business and a clearer focus on the remaining Containerboard business. We are pleased to see that the company has scheduled a strategic update shortly, possibly a result of our joint efforts with other shareholders.

New positions

We accumulated a position in Vitesco Technologies, Continental's Powertrain unit that was spun off in September 2021. While the traditional Powertrain segment is structurally challenged due to the ongoing electric transition, Vitesco appears better placed than its peers to navigate the transition to electric mobility. We estimate that shares are trading at 2-3 times mid-term core earnings power which we believe is unwarranted given the strong balance sheet and underlying cash flow stream and future potential.

We also added US based Textainer, one of the world's leading lessors and managers of shipping containers. Following supply disruption in global trade, the operating environment has substantially improved which bodes well for revenue growth combined with favourable credit conditions. Importantly, the company is now locking in higher profitability contracts with long duration which we believe the market underestimates.

Another newcomer is Japanese construction equipment producer Komatsu, the world's second largest behind Caterpillar. The global construction and mining machinery market bottomed out in 2020 due to the impact from COVID-19 but is recovering broadly supported by higher commodity prices. Komatsu also has a technological lead over many peers in electrification and autonomous functionality. We believe the shares trade at an unwarranted discount to normalized earnings power and its main peer US based Caterpillar, indicating a substantial upside in the share price from a mid-term perspective.

Outlook

At the end of the year, the portfolio consists of 45 substantially undervalued equities with tangible catalysts for re-rating over the next 2-3 years. The aggregate upside to our price targets is more than 50% and 85% of the portfolio is currently positioned in the small and mid-cap segment. Heading into 2022, we believe the investment environment will become more sensitive to equity valuations on the back of global interest rate normalisation. This will increase the probability for rotation into underpriced equities with above average mid-term earnings yields at the expense of the higher multiple stocks which currently dominate index baskets globally.
