Risk profile (SRRI)

We have classified this product as 6 out of 7, which is the second-highest risk class.

The summary risk indicator is a guide to the level of risk of this product compared to other products. It shows how likely it is that the product will lose money because of movements in the markets. The second-highest risk class rates the potential losses from future performance at a high level. Other risks materially relevant to the PRIIP not included in the summary risk indicator: Event risk, liquidity risk, operational risk, counterparty risk, derivatives risk and currency risk. If the fund invests in securities in a currency other than the fund's base currency, the value is affected by changes in the exchange rate. In addition, the value of your payout may be affected if your local currency is different from the fund's currency. This product does not include any protection from future market performance so you could lose some or all of your investment.

Q4 commentary, December 2025

Global equity markets advanced in the fourth quarter, buoyed by strong investor risk appetite. Bond markets were broadly stable, with the US generic 10-year government bond yield remaining near 4.2%. In commodities, gold and silver capped a blockbuster year, rising approximately 72% and 164% respectively in 2025.

Notable political and economic developments emerged across the globe during the period. In the US, Republican candidates suffered losses in several special state elections, reflecting swing-voter dissatisfaction with persistent inflation under the Trump presidency, which continues to erode consumer purchasing power. While the Trump administration has reduced regulatory burdens on businesses, extensive tariffs appear to be weighing on inflation and economic growth, albeit less severely than initially feared. These electoral setbacks may serve as a warning ahead of the November 2026 midterm elections, which could strip Republicans of their unified control of government and effectively render

President Trump a lame duck during the final two years of his term. In South America, Chile elected a new conservative government, following similar shifts in Argentina, Ecuador, and Bolivia. After years of subdued economic growth, the region may benefit from more business-friendly policies, potentially creating attractive opportunities for equity investors and warranting close monitoring in 2026 and beyond. Meanwhile, across the Atlantic, Switzerland unexpectedly reported zero inflation, the lowest reading in four years.

SKAGEN Global underperformed its benchmark index in the fourth quarter, despite outperforming the benchmark in both November and December. As previously noted, the fund's valuation remains highly compelling at current levels, and there are early indications that the market may be beginning to recognise the significant undervaluation at which many of the portfolio holdings are trading. The fund's three best performers measured by absolute return contribution in the quarter were Alphabet (Google), DSV and Samsung Electronics. In the summer, many commentators worried that Alphabet would suffer as OpenAI's competing product ChatGTP gained wide usage. However, these fears have not yet materialised and more recently Gemini 3, Alphabet's novel family of multi-modal AI models, has been cited as a threat to Chat GTP. In addition, Alphabet expanded its cloud business and launched in-house developed integrated circuits called Tensor Processing Units (TPUs) to accelerate machine learning workloads. The stock has doubled in value since the dip in Q2. The Danish logistics giant DSV climbed as the market gained confidence in the Schenker integration. In South Korea, the technology giant Samsung Electronics surfed on the AI and memory chip wave to top off an amazing year. The ordinary share generated 129% total return in local currency in the calendar year 2025. The fund's three largest detractors measured by absolute return contribution were RELX, Home Depot and Thomson Reuters. Both RELX and Thomson Reuters struggled in equity markets during 2025, having been labelled "AI losers," as their digital content and information businesses were – unfairly, in our view – perceived as vulnerable to AI-driven competition. Operationally and financially, however, both companies have performed in line with our expectations, leading us to view their share price underperformance as unwarranted. Home Depot also pulled back amid continued weakness in consumer discretionary spending. SKAGEN Global did not initiate or exit any positions in the fourth quarter. However, we trimmed our holdings in Samsung Electronics, JP Morgan and Alphabet after strong performance. We re-allocated capital to positions with more attractive long-term risk-reward profiles at current valuation levels including, Marsh & McLennan, Brown & Brown and Aegon.

Following three consecutive years of outsized positive absolute returns for global equities, market sentiment has become decidedly optimistic. This is reflected in Bank of America's Global Fund Manager survey published in December, which showed that macro optimism is at its highest level since 2021 while investor cash allocations are at just 3.3%, one of the lowest levels recorded for over 25 years. As contrarian investors, we are instinctively cautious when confidence is this elevated. Our approach is to identify significantly undervalued companies with attractive long-term risk-reward profiles, i.e. companies that are able to successfully navigate a wide range of different macro scenarios. At the same time, micro-economic risks have increased as equity indices that were once broadly diversified have become increasingly concentrated in a handful of large technology companies. By the end of 2025, the top-10 constituents of the MSCI AC World Index accounted for more than a quarter of the index, with all but one belonging to the Big Tech cohort and therefore exposed to similar underlying drivers. While Big Tech has done well over the past decade and may continue to do so, periods of perceived "easy money" tend to attract transient capital and foster complacency, often setting the stage for a reversal. In this context, it is worth noting that more than half of the survey respondents identified "Long Magnificent 7" (Big Tech stocks) as the "most crowded trade".

At SKAGEN Global, we take a long-term approach based on prudent risk management principles. Piling into what is currently the "hottest area in the market" is (usually) not compatible with such an approach. Instead, our current portfolio offers a highly differentiated exposure compared to the global equity benchmark index based on our proprietary analysis and carefully selected holdings for investors with a multi-year time horizon. We enter 2026 with a substantially undervalued portfolio that we believe offers a highly compelling risk-reward profile underpinned by solid balance sheets in case the music suddenly stops and dark clouds appear on the horizon. We will not predict what challenges the market may throw at us next year, but we will continue to execute our investment strategy with diligence and discipline to deliver attractive risk-adjusted returns to our partners and investors. Thank you for your continued support.

Sustainability

SKAGEN's approach to sustainability

Our ESG approach is built on four pillars. In keeping with SKAGEN's active investment philosophy, our sustainability activities centre on active engagement with our holding companies, which is where we believe we can have the greatest impact. We recognise, however, that the full potential of a sustainable investment strategy is best realised when combining the following four pillars.

- ✓ Exclusion
- ✓ Enhanced due diligence
- ✓ ESG factsheet
- ✓ Active ownership

Article 8

Sustainable Finance Disclosure Regulation (SFDR)

The product promotes environmental and social characteristics by directing its capital towards companies and issuers that meet defined ESG (environmental, social and governance) criteria. This is achieved through compliance with international norms and conventions, by taking into account negative impacts on sustainable development (PAI) and through product- or activity-based exclusions. See the prospectus for more information on the products sustainability characteristics.
